County employees review updated personnel policy manual

Ben Coulter THE MADISONIAN ben@madisoniannews.com

During their regular meeting on Tuesday in Virginia City, Madison County Commissioners met with county employees to address the revised Madison County Personnel Policy manual that will take effect on January 16, 2013.

Commissioner Dave Schulz explained that the revised 2013 policy was more than six years in the making, and that the previous policy was originally adopted in 2002. Since that time several additions to the policy have been made through resolutions, and while various human resources personnel had been tasked with updating the policy, it was never fully revised. The county contracted human resource management consultant Jim Nys of Personnel Plus consulting services in Helena to help revise the Schulz said that the board of commissioners originally began to review the policy with some department head staff, but that was easier said than done.

"No matter how we read the statute, we just weren't comfortable trying to figure out how to put it in language so there would be a reasonable understanding between the employer or department head and the staff member," he said.

The revised policy is significantly reduced in length compared to the previous one, in part to help with the readability of the document. Schulz added that a lawyer from the Montana Association of Counties called the revised document the best personnel policy he had ever seen, and that other counties have expressed interest in develop-

Crews worked late into the night to mend a broken water main on Armitage Street by Moores Creek.

Crew works in wet conditions to repair broken water main

Allison Clark FOR THE MADISONIAN Allison@bin112.com

Temperatures dipped into the single digits last Wednesday night as crews worked past midnight to fix a broken water main near Moores Creek on Armitage Street. According to Kelly Elser, Director of Public Works in Ennis, an eight-inch cast iron of some of the valves in town and the inability to completely shut the water off, the crews had to fix the leak "live", with water spraying in their faces most of the time. And because of the location of the leak, the City contracted Aspen Construction to do much of the excavation. The pipe was deep, and the work had to be completed quickly.

"The main concern was whether the leak was under the culvert," noted Elser. "That would have made it even more difficult.'

A majority of homes in the area were called

Due to the condition and warned they would be out of water between 7pm and 10pm. However, most had water the entirety of the time due to the fact they were repairing the leak with the water on.

> Elser has been with Public Works a little over five years, and has only seen a leak one other time. That one was an easier fix and he did not need outside help. According to Elser, in the last 15 years, there have been a total of four such leaks, including this last one. He says the occurrences are somewhat common.

For now, the problem is fixed.

FWP seeks comment on fishing access site rule

From Montana Department of Fish, Wildlife and Parks

The Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks Commission is seeking public comment on fishing access site rules for camping fees, group use permits, facility rentals, and special recreation permits on the Blackfoot and Madison rivers.

The new rules would also authorize FWP to require bear resistant food storage at some fishing access sites. FWP anticipates requiring bear resistant food storage at a few sites located primarily along the Blackfoot River near Missoula.

The effort would help to prevent conflicts between humans and bears, and are similar to food storage requirements at FWP wildlife management areas and state parks.

To comment or find a copy of the proposed rule, visit FWP website at fwp.mt.gov. Click Noticeshttp://fwp. "Public mt.gov/fishing/." Comments, due by Jan. 18, can also be emailed to: FWPFASRuleComments@mt.gov; or mailed to: Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks, Attn: FAS Rule, P.O. Box 200701, Helena, MT 59620-0701. Local conservation districts to host workshops for ag producers

By Kate Schwend

FOR THE MADISONIAN

Local conservation districts are spending the winter preparing for the summer by partnering with NRCS to offer several workshops for area ag producers.

After last summer's drought conditions and with an extended drought predicted for the coming summer, these workshops have been created to teach producers innovative ways to keep production up and sustainable through dry conditions.

First up, the Ruby Conservation District is hosting a workshop and information panel on soil health on Jan. 16. The session will feature stories and advice from local producers who have worked on innovative ways to improve soil health on their lands. Topics will focus on reducing erosion, building organic matter, increasing drought tolerance, improving the nutrient cycle, and lowering input cost.

This is a great opportunity for local producers to see what has worked for others in the area, and to connect with and get advice from people who have experience with new techniques.

The Ruby's free workshop includes lunch and will be from 11 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. in the Philanthropy River Building in Sheridan. For more information, call the NRCS office at 842-5741. RSVPs are requested at the same number by Jan. 11.

On the other side of the mountains, the Madison Conservation District is planning a three part workshop series focusing on livestock and land health. The workshops will be held Jan. 17, Feb. 14, and March 5.

The first session of the series is titled "Livestock and Land Health," and will discuss how livestock can affect soil health, and how grazing can be used to improve land conditions.

Real estate market in Madison County shows encouraging upswing

Ben Coulter The Madisonian ben@madisoniannews.com

Local realtor Bill Mercer of Clearwater Montana Properties in Ennis had his best year ever in the real estate market last year, due in large part to his offices' affiliation with the Cabela's Trophy Properties net-

"That to me was encouraging because it appears that people are either buying property to maybe build on or they're buying it to invest in," he said.

But while Mercer is riding high at Clearwater Montana Properties, not everyone in the real estate business saw the same success he did last year. Toni Bowen and husband Don of Arrow Real Estate said that 2011 was a better year for their business than 2012, but that was due in part to the high-end properties they sold that year. And although Bowen says the market is slower and the demand is down, she was encouraged by the number of younger people buying property and moving to the area.

"There are still a lot of people out of state wanting to move here and retire. A lot of them are waiting until they can sell their properties where they are moving from," Bowen said. "In general, we've kept pretty

Bowen went on to explain how trends in the real estate market have shifted in recent

Ironically, Mercer sold over 12 bare ground properties last year. He explains that much of his business comes through referrals, and the connection with Cabela's certainly hasn't

"It's huge because people who are looking for properties, particularly in the West, think of recreational type properties and that sort of thing," he said. "From what I saw at the end of 2012 we're getting an awful lot of people contacting us through the Cabela's connections, so I look for it to be a good real estate year."

Karen Talley of Clear Creek Realty in Sheridan said that while middle range properties moved slowly last year, the real estate market is beginning to show signs of improvement. She said that the Ruby Valley Garnet LLC mining company plans to bring approximately 40 to 60 jobs to the Ruby Valley this spring, which could potentially impact the real estate market there.

"This is good for the schools, its good for the businesses, hospital, you name it," she said. And while the real estate market has the potential to impact local communities, Bill Mercer's wife Quinn thinks that it is in fact the community that impacts the market, with a new hospital, new school, nice restaurants and an overall quality of life that is desirable to many people.

"I think all those factors have people stop and look and look and say 'Wait a second. this is no little Montana town," she said.

Safety advised on national forest during trapping season

From Leona Rodreick PUBLIC AFFAIRS OFFICER Beaverhead-Deerlodge NATIONAL FOREST

DILLON - Montana's trapping season is in full swing and the Beaverhead Deerlodge National Forest wants to offer important reminders for all winter recreationists.

Dave Myers, Beaverhead Deerlodge National Forest supervisor says, "Montana's Fish Wildlife and Parks has trap setback requirements from roads, trails and campgrounds and most trappers take additional efforts to place traps in areas well away from those frequented by other recreationists."

"Dog owners and others concerned about trapping can minimize risks by staying on well used routes and keeping pets close by when hiking, snowshoeing, or skiing."

Myers adds "keeping pets close to you while out in the woods helps reduce not only accidental trapping concerns but also keeps pets from unnecessarily harassing wild-life." According to FWP, winter recreationists should be on the lookout for signs of trapping activity; a lightly traveled snowmobile track or a few footsteps in the snow may indicate a trapper's presence and should be avoided.

Recreationists who want to learn more about Montana's trapping season should look at the website http://fwp.mt.gov/ hunting/trapping/. The link has good information, like how to become more proficient at releasing traps and snares and Montana Fish Wildlife and Parks contact information.

FLY TYING IN ENNIS

Brian Rosenberg from the Madison River Fishing Company in Ennis displays a familiar fly pattern

Fly tying workshop offers expert advice for local anglers

While most recreational anglers around Montana hang it up for the season as the snow flies and fall turns to winter, a handful of diehards are already preparing for next year as they stock up their fly boxes with dozens of flies they tied themselves in hopes of landing wild trout that inhabit the states rivers, lakes and streams.

Every Tuesday evening a group of local angling enthusiasts meets upstairs at the Ennis Café for a fly tying workshop where they share tips and techniques for tying flies with friends and neighbors. And while asking for help from some of the most seasoned fishermen one might encounter on the water might be intimidating, Ennis resident Ron Hardwick explains the group has no problem with helping others learn about the bugs they use to catch fish.

"That's what the whole thing's

Hardwick. "We're sharing, people are increasing their knowledge, learning different ways and techniques." "You can tie your own stuff or you can see someone else tying something you want to tie, or if you're new to it you can ask somebody and they'll sit down and get you started," he continued. "Anybody can come. Hardwick himself has been tying flies for almost 25 years now, and he admits he's a "dry fly snob," primarily using flies that rest on the water's surface. Although he boasts of catching 26-inch Madison River brown trout on his own dry flies, he's happy to share his wisdom and experience with others.

"We have a lot of people who have been in a fly tying arena for 20, 30 years," Hard-about," said An assortment of insect patterns sits on display in a local angler's fly box. wick said. "You can take this forum and expand your ability leaps and bounds based upon just the experience of the people around you."

From beads and nymphs to hoppers and buggers, the anglers in the group have spent enough time on the water to know what works and what doesn't. Not to mention what fly patterns they need to stock up on.

"After a while you don't consider necessarily patterns," said Hardwick. "You've got enough tying experience behind you that you look to see what's coming off the water and you go in and duplicate Part of the intrigue of tying flies is learning more about the sport, Hardwick added.

"Its fun, its productive. The more ways you get involved in a hobby or a sport, the more different directions you approach it," he said. "I never used another fly, outside of the flies I tied, for about five years until a friend forced me to use his, which was ok."

Tying flies has also helped Hardwick understand the biology of river ecosystems.

"You've learned the entomology, you've learned about the bug life," he continued. "You've seen the bugs out of the water and you look around and say 'Ok, that's what I need to duplicate."

As for the satisfaction of hauling in a fish on a fly that he tied himself, Hardwick said its difficult to explain, "especially when someone comes up and says, 'Hey, what are you using?"

With a genuine laugh, he answers "You won't find it at the store."

The barn door; closed behind the horse

Dear Editor,

There is a rush to create a new "anti gun" program due to the senseless shooting of all the children and teachers at Newton,

Unfortunately, the horse has left the barn; those military type weapons never should have been allowed to be sold to the public. Anyone who was on the approval panels should be banned in making any decisions that affect the general public's welfare and especially our laws.

But, again, unfortunately, we have appointed or voted these

"decision makers" in our present situation. When that decision was made, didn't any of these so-called "intellects" realize that it doesn't take 30 rounds to kill a deer. Any hunter who needs an AR-15 to shoot an animal shouldn't be allowed to buy a license to hunt. It's just plain insanity and only hurts the real hunters and weapon's collectors.

Now there are millions of these rifles in American's homes. With the ACLU, and other "civil protection organizations" the Feds will be fought tooth and nail by these people when they try to take these weapons or forbid their

That horse is gone, never to return, but hopefully the public will start to realize these "intellects" have allowed their crowd to pass other laws that are now tearing this country apart.

Whether you agree or not, these issues - gay marriages, legal marijuana, gays in the military, abused USA borders, illegal immigration allowed so a political party can use it - for or against - during elections, open cities protecting aliens, this rifle dispute, blacks against whites, men against women, are all going to have one result. This drive to destroy one portion of our Constitution has one thing with all these issues and that is after they get rid of the Second Amendment, they'll start to pick apart other Amendments they disagree on.

That sleeping giant; the American public had better wake up before these so called intellects we elect, completely destroy our Constitution and our country in their drive for political power. That's why they fight a compromise. They are both protecting their turf; they don't worry about the rest of the city.

Grateful for generous hearts in the Ruby Valley

Dear Editor,

I am personally grateful to the generous hearts of those who made the Ruby Valley Giving Tree a true gift to those in need in the Virginia City, Alder and Sheridan areas.

Whether you sent money, took a tag, or donated product, colored tags, or took the time to call me with names, it takes all of us working together to ensure success. Every tag was taken from the Christmas tree at the Ruby Valley National Bank in

Sheridan which enabled me to take care of some last minute names of families with children as well as some elderly that came to me after the tags were pulled and Christmas was days away.

There were also many businesses in and outside our area that donated product or discounted items to make it extra special. I'm merely the messenger who is so very appreciative.

Will only work for the best interest of Madison County citizens

Dear Editor,

Montana, and more specifically, southwest Montana is slowly awakening to the reality that forces beyond our state borders have an extraordinary influence in the land use policies and environmental regulations being implemented at the local level.

We are increasingly being held hostage to policies crafted by state and federal government agencies, run by unelected administrative bureaucrats, enforcing policies written by environmental special interests, and funded with limitless tax exempt foundation money. It is contrary to our constitutional republican form of government to ignore the needs of the folks who have lived, worked, and died on the land for generations, and instead comply with "vision statements" dreamed up by unelected bureaucrats in Washington, D.C. or in the boardrooms of powerful and well-funded tax exempt foundations.

County commissioners are elected to support and represent local interests and to protect the lives, liberty and property of the citizens of their county. As your county commissioner, my duty and allegiance is clear...I am here to protect and serve you, the citizens of Madison County. My purpose is not to defend international, federal, and state programs that are contrary to the interests of Madison County. The federal bureaucracy, state agencies, nongovernmental(NGOs) and tax exempt foundations are more than adequately represented and funded by others.

Isn't it time that local government stands up and supports the local citizens' interests instead of overreaching programs and agencies that are making it more and more difficult to make a living off the land? I have been told that we should work with federal and state agencies to get the best deal that they are willing to give us, and that's the best we should expect. As long as those agencies are representing the best interests of Madison County and our citizens, I will work with them... if not, count me out. We owe better to our constituents than a "go along to get along at any cost" mentality.

With that in mind, Jefferson County Commissioner Leonard Wortman and I petitioned the Agriculture Committee at our MACo annual convention in September to allow concerned commissioners to form a Large Predator Working Group. Our goal was to study how best to support our constituents and deal with the myriad issues of dealing with rapidly increasing numbers of large predators. We decided to ask each interested county to draft their own Large Predator Policy that reflected local issues and to collaborate through MACo to produce a statewide policy that has real impact on the large predator debate.

I drafted a policy for Madison County that I felt represented the local perspective and mirrored many of ideas included in Jefferson, Gallatin and Ravalli County efforts. The text of our Large Predator Resolution includes language requiring the consultation and coordination of state agencies which seems to be a real sticking point for some folks concerned that FWP may not view our actions favorably; thinking us not adequately conciliatory and cooperative with their existing policies and stated goals. There is a concern that FWP may not like our request for an equal seat at the table in negotiating ongoing large predator policies and may look at us as being entirely too uppity and outspoken to deserve that level of participation. To those folks, I suggest that your Madison County Commissioners are here to represent the citizens first and our cooperation with federal and state agencies is dependent on their adherence to policies that protect the lives, liberty and property of our citizens. Our allegiance should be clear.

Please look for my future letters on large predator policies, coordination legislation, wilderness takings, private property, free roaming bison, natural resource development and other thorny issues confronting southwest Mon-

Disarm America? What have we learned from history

Dear Editor,

I have been pondering much of the emotional rhetoric that has been flowing from the gun control folks and there are some serious problems with the knee jerk reaction that has occurred over the heinous murders of the innocent.

Before I continue I would like to go on record that there is no way on God's green earth that I could ever condone the coldblooded killing of anyone. But to use these murders to punish law abiding citizens for the action of a highest crime rates? How come very small percentage of the pop- the news media never covers the ulation is ridiculous. It's kind of individual that saved his own life like disciplining your neighbor's child for something your own child did.

If we disarm America then we haven't learned anything from history. Adolf Hitler disarmed Germany in the years prior to the holocaust. The Jews had no way to defend themselves against the horrors that Hitler had planned for them. China and the United Nations would love to disarm us, why is that? Why is it that the states and cities that have very strict gun control laws have the and perhaps others with a gun, but spend months dwelling on these murders that crazy people commit? Why is it that the politicians and the Hollywood types have armed bodyguards, but they would love to take away our right to self-defense? Is self-defense or gun ownership a class privilege? Why are we so quick to move to a military and police state?

We evidently do not learn from history. If we were to allow trained teachers and school employees to volunteer to carry concealed weapons, they could save many lives of the innocent. Our founding fathers gave us the freedoms we have today because they were armed. If they were disarmed we would not have the United States of America. Ponder how different our history would be if our founding fathers never owned guns.

I am thankful to God for this newspaper that allows us to voice our opinions and the founding fathers that made this all possible without fear of being arrested for having an opinion.

Treasured the last four years

Dear Editor,

2013 welcomes a new crop of Legislators that will be sworn in on Monday, Jan. 7, to defend and uphold the Constitutions of our state and the United States. It is important as a citizen to encourage, support, and defend their efforts and also call them to account should they fail. As the past four years have brought many challenges to our state, it is important to remember that good government begins with good questions and conversation amongst people of good will. While no single legislator is responsible for good law, failure and success can be claimed in part by all. Some of the successes I was proud to be part

1. Providing the opportunity of local water owners to privatize the Cataract Dam in Pony.

2. Secure funding, in accordance with the law, to make necessary repairs to the Ruby Dam, the Blaine Springs Bridge, and the Sheridan Sewer System without undermining the integrity of my office by playing politics with the Governor.

3. Beginning the conversation to restore the value of the peoples' labor by restoring value to our money system (Sound Constitutional Dollars).

4. Educating the people of HD 71 and the State of Montana on the rights and duties of a fully informed juror, as set forth by our founding fathers.

5. Restoration of parental rights in regard to minors seeking abortion.

Some failures that will soon come home to rest are the massive tax increases that will be paid by all for the nearly 1.5 billion dollars of federal stimulus that was pumped into many programs that increased the state's base line budget, increased the size of government and regulation over our lives, and most certainly will be conversation for future budgets. Many legislators, as well as constituents were fooled into believing it would be free money.

As a last official act of representation for HD 71, I drafted a bill and submitted it to Representative Shaw that simply requires all public institutions of education to recite the preamble to our state Constitution once a week and provide with existing resources age appropriate lessons to teach the relationship of its content to the laws of nature and nature's God. I am proud and pleased that Rep. Shaw agreed to carry it.

I would like to thank all the people that have supported and encouraged me. I have met some fine people in HD 71 over the last four years, and I will always treasure the time I served.

It is nothing but a wilderness bill

Dear Editor,

Please note: this bill cannot make it on it's own merits and has been attached to Senator Reids omnibus bill.

This bill was never intended to be a forest jobs and recreation act. This bill was written with environmental and logging groups behind closed doors. The people it will most affect were never part of the bill drafting process. The logging industry now has seen through what is going on and wants nothing to do with this bill. Throughout the language in the bill there was never a guarantee that one tree would be cut, the only guarantee is that there will be thousands of acres of new wilderness; which Southwest Montana does not want nor do the majority of the people of the State of Montana want. We can come up with all sorts of numbers about how many people want this bill but the real truth is it is way lower than what we are being lead to believe.

Over the year's culverts, roads and bridges have washed out and not been replaced or rebuilt, with the reason being there is no money to accomplish these repairs. Many prime hunting areas have become less accessible because of these inactions. Tester's Wilderness Bill will accomplish more of the same. The Snowcrest do not meet the intent of the Federal Wilderness Act. No mineral assessment has been done in this mountain range. Improvements such as pasture rotations, stock tanks, and integrated weed management by grazing associations in proposed wilderness areas have improved range conditions, water quality for fisheries and forage for livestock and wildlife.

This bill is nothing more than a means of getting livestock off of public lands. The Snowcrest is a prime example of how multiple-use of our National Forests is supposed to work for the good of We the People! If this Wilderness Bill were to pass our small towns, hospitals, schools, and the ranching communities will all suffer immensely. Everyone wants nothing more than to have clean and healthy forests. Our friends and neighbors in the logging industry need to go back to work but this bill does nothing to help them do so. Local sportsman, ranchers, recreationists, will do whatever it takes to improve habitat for grazing, fisheries and wildlife habitat. There is no way Montanans that have worked in and enjoyed the Snowcrests will ever let them be harmed.

We must look ahead; this Wilderness Bill does not accomplish that at all. We need to think about the generations to come; not just think about ourselves today! This bill appears to be nothing more than a legacy for certain people.

dear Maddy,

This year I made a New Year resolution to be a genuine person and not to come off as fake. Not fake in the sense of pretending to be some-one or something I'm not but rather not engaging in conversations or social functions with people I don't necessarilv care for. How can I be "real" without being rude?

Could Care Less near Cardwell

dear Could Care Less,

I commend you for your resolution. It may be a change from what people are used to seeing from you and it may be hard at first. Expect people to call you out if it's a huge change from what they're used to. You can still strike up a conversation about something general without being considered "fake" - people make small talk with strangers all the time. As far as not "whooping it up" with someone you don't like (or maybe the feeling is mutual) then don't. You can say hello in passing or shoot a smile their way without engaging any more than that. If the social functions are what have you uneasy, then make a conscious effort to only accept invites to places you care to be. Choosing to put yourself in a cabin, in the woods, in the middle of winter, with people you don't care for will only lead to a miserable weekend. You are in charge of vour social scene so only say 'yes" to the events you would be 100% comfortable at, no matter who else shows up!.

Pastor plans to 'revive' community youth center

FOR THE MADISONIAN allison@bin112.com

The Assembly of God Church.

After several years, since closing up shop at the Masonic Lodge, Ennis will have a new home for a community youth center at the Assembly of God Church in Ennis come February. Charles Tucker, pastor at the church, has taken on this new venture and plans to transform the basement of their church into the latest place kids in the community can visit, play and be safe while doing so.

Tucker's life's work up until now has revolved around preaching the gospel. With his latest project, he is simply opening the doors to kids in the community, allowing them to have a free place to gather, socialize, play games and just be teenagers without any outside pressure.

"The kids need something to do," says Tucker. "They've got the bowling alley now, they've got the movie theatre, and all of those things cost money. Kids will be able to come here and play pool, ping pong, read, hopefully get some help with their homework. And most all of it will be free."

Tucker has spoken with several businesses and parents in the community and feels the excitement from them about getting the youth center going again. The biggest hurdle will be whether they have enough money to open it. The Lion's Club, which ran the previous youth center in the basement of the Masonic Lodge, estimated to Tucker that they spent $1300 monthly to keep it in operation. There are some costs Tucker is hoping to alleviate with the help from outside sources. For instance, he plans to talk to the sheriff's department and the city police to help with background checks for volunteers and workers, something that normally costs anywhere from $35 to $135.

"If the county will do that, it will save us startup money right away," remarks Tucker. "We're hoping we can do a lot of fun things for the kids, like pool tournaments, ping pong tournaments. That sort of thing, which they did some of before."

Previously, the Lion's Club paid a director to oversee the center, a cost that Tucker hopes to eventually overtake when he hires a director for the new center. However, he is expecting lower overall monthly expenses considering the church is already insured and it's a newer building, so the heating should cost less. Money is not Tucker's only concern.

"I heard about the youth center a few months ago and started checking to find out why it closed," states Tucker. "But, as it turned out, it didn't close due to lack of finances, it and bathrooms. A few interior closed due to lack of people to work in it '

When he approached the Lion's Club and told them about his idea to move the center into the church basement, the Club made everything available to them that was in the previous center, including 2 pool tables, 2 foosball tables and a pingpong table.

Along with those items, Tucker has board games, books, even a projector and console for up to four kids to play "Guitar Hero" at the same time.

"We will start next week with remodeling and hopefully open the first part of February," says Tucker. "We are a small church. I know it's a big building, but we have a small congregation. We just need the community to get behind it and support it financially and with volunteers.'

The church alone does not have the finances to back the center, but they do plan to come up with the volunteers to help run it as well as provide the facility.

Remodeling the basement will be the largest part of the project. At one time it housed a large children's ministry with separate spaces for different classes, which the church has since moved upstairs. The basement is already equipped with a full kitchen walls will need to be removed to create the space needed for everything else. Tucker says the space in the church basement is equivalent to the old space in the Masonic Lodge.

Tucker plans to run the center just like they ran the last one. He is unsure of what the hours will be at this time, but with hope he wants to try and run seven days a week and as many hours a day as they can find volunteers to supervise the

"Again, it's going to be open to everybody," notes Tucker. "The church will be responsible for it. It's not just for church kids; it's for everybody in the community."

The center already has volunteers signed up that were actually involved back when the Lion's Club ran it. Now, these volunteers are active and working in the community and want to support the center to help keep it open.

Tucker reiterates, "It's not a church service, as far as we're going to come in and open in prayer and sing songs and take an offering. It's a church service in the fact that we are doing it for the community." His ultimate hope is that the center can offer free food and beverages for the kids as well. The kids will have access to the rather large fellowship hall upstairs, which also has a full kitchen and tables where they can eat or study.

Tucker still needs more volunteers to help with demolition project in the basement. Painting and recarpeting will need to be done as well before the center can open its doors.

"I know there are kids in the community that need a safe place to come, a free place to play," said Tucker. "We will have good adult supervision here. We expect them to act like teenagers. We don't expect them to come in here and act like adults."

Anyone interested in volunteering to help get the Center up and running, donating time when the Center gets started, or wants to donate to the Center is encouraged to contact Charles Tucker at 589-4107 or send mail to PO Box 705, Ennis 59729 with a notation for the Youth Center.

Senior lunch programs bring communities together

While the people who live in Madison County are spread few and far between, many of the elderly residents in the community are brought together each week by senior lunch programs designed to offer them an affordable, well balanced meal as well as a chance to get together and visit with friends and neighbors.

Although most people don't often take the time out of their day to sit down and enjoy lunch, senior citizens are often faced with just the opposite, having all the time in the world and not much to do. And for those who live alone, preparing a full meal for one or two people can be a difficult burden. So when they have a chance to meet up with friends and sit down for lunch, the food itself becomes secondary to the social aspect of talking with folks around town on a daily basis, and nobody knows that better that Ennis resident Dianne Keller.

For 28 years, Keller has those events," she said. been preparing senior lunches at the Ennis Town Hall every Tuesday through Friday. On average, about 25 people come to eat and visit with their peers around town, and for those who can't make it, the program offers to deliver meals to them. The program asks for a fourdollar donation per meal, and people give what they can.

"There are a lot of senior citizens here in Ennis and Madison County, and a lot of them are alone," said Keller. "I think it's very important."

Just over the hill in Virginia City, Jacqui Marotta enjoys a sandwich with two friends at the Virginia City Creamery. After they finish eating, they each enjoy a scoop of chocolate ice cream as they sit and visit with each other. Marotta says the senior lunch programs are a great networking tool for elderly residents to stay connected with each other. If nothing more than a welcome opportunity just to get out of the house.

"You find out what's going on in the community, so you have an opportunity to go to

The Creamery offers senior lunches for $3 starting at 11:30 a.m. on Tuesday and Thursday for anyone over the age of 60. For owner Mark Weber, the lunch program offers a chance for him to visit with the handful of year-round residents in the small historic town that thrives in the summer but is pretty darn quiet in the winter.

"There is a lot of visiting going on, catching up with the gossip and all of that kind of thing," Weber said of the lunch program. "I've got five or six tables in here, but when they come in they're all one."

"I think these people getting together just kind of takes some of the winter blues away," he added.

At the Senior Citizens Food and Service Center in Sheridan, local elderly residents have been showing up to enjoy lunch and each other's company for 35 years. Head cook Shirley Talbott serves between 35 and 40 meals Monday through Friday, and approximately 15 of those are delivered to people who can't make it into the senior center for various reasons. The center asks patrons for a $3.50 donation for their meal and $4 for deliveries, but anything and everything is appreciated. The dining room area seats up to 28 people, but often folks come in just to chat even if they aren't

"That's half the reason they come in is for the social aspect," said Talbott. "It gives them something to get up for, it gives them a chance to visit with their friends, have a good solid meal and that sort of thing."

Just down the road at the Wagon Wheel in Twin Bridges, the kitchen stays busy on Tuesday and Friday with a similar program serving senior lunches. Going on four years now, owner Wanda Osborne serves more than a dozen meals on average to local seniors, and the Twin Bridges Senior Community Center delivers to a handful of those who are unable to come to the restaurant. The menu varies throughout the week with the option of a soup and salad bar, and donations for the meals are given to the Senior Community Center.

"Some of the gentlemen who are widowed or don't really want to cook for themselves have the option to go have a different meal that is on a fixed income," Osborne me."

program. "And it's kind of a social event because they get to chat with their peers, and most of them show up forty-five minutes to an hour early before lunch and they all sit together and have a conversation. That was part of the purpose," she continued.

'They seem to enjoy it, so economically feasible for them that makes it worth while to

Lady Wildcats beat Lady Mustangs with a lot of hustle, defense

The Harrison / Willow Creek Lady Wildcats took night in Harrison, narrowly escaping with a 26-24 win as both teams fought to out play one another with hustle and aggressive defense.

Harrison junior Kristen White led the Wildcats with a game-high seven points, five rebounds and three steals on their way to victory. Going in to the game White said the team's focus was on executing the offense, but the Lady Mustangs' defense made that more difficult than they expected.

"They played really scrappy," said White. "They definitely are a really good defensive team."

Ennis junior Haley in an epic matchup Friday high six points for the Lady Mustangs, but it wasn't enough to overcome the Lady Wildcats in the low scoring game. Ennis could very well have put up enough points for the win were it not for Harrison sophomore Britt Cooper, who blocked four shots and put up five points for the Lady Wildcats in their winning effort. At one point, it almost seemed that Cooper put up an obstacle that Ennis could not find a way to get around Cooper said the Lady on the Ennis Lady Mustangs Nestegard put up a team Wildcats' strategy was to force turnovers from Ennis and minimize their own mistakes, and she credited the Lady Mustangs for their effort.

A: In our digital age, a website is an important component of a marketing plan. However, it is not the golden key. Successful product marketing includes a combination of digital and print media, plus some old-fashioned sales efforts. Besides your website, your initial digital resources are social networking (Facebook, Google+, LinkedIn, Pinterest), and business listing services (Google Places, Manta, Bing and your local chamber). For print media, consider creating a brochure of your products for distribution to local realtors. New homeowners are an excellent target market for home décor ideas. Look into Made in Montana or local art shows as sales venues. Your website is your 24/7 showroom but it doesn't need to be your only sales venue.

Auction, private treaty or estate/ garage sale for asset liquidation, which is best?

A: For good quality items, especially entire estates or ranch liquidations (living or deceased), live auction has significant advantages. At auction, MANY buyers are bidding against each other at the SAME time for the SAME items. This drives the prices up as opposed to estate/garage/private sales where someone sets a price for each item (which may be lower than they would have brought at auction in the first place) then perspective buyers come one at a time offering you even less. Inevitably many items remain unsold on the last day of these 'sales' and must be offered at 1/2 price or just 'hauled off'. A professional auction service will turn EVERYTHING into cash by the end of the auction AND usually pay for itself 'and then some' with the higher prices realized from live bidding competition! DENTISTRY

What can you tell me about Grinding (bruxism) and/or Clenching?

The main contributor is stress, like a new job, financial issues or when a loved one dies. Chewing gum often or lifting heavy things will also overwork these facial muscles. The worst cases are usually drug abusers. Most people do not detect that they have a problem because it is most often expressed while a person sleeps. Tell tail signs are chipped or broken teeth, flattened teeth, and sore facial muscles or teeth when you

Before destroying your teeth further, go see your dentist and get a mouth guard. The cost ranges depending on the type needed from $400-800. Botox is another option that can sometimes help by itself or in combination with the retainers. Insurances usually will not pay for these. A combination of these with relaxation techniques like deep breathing and yoga will save you a lot of pain and thousands of dollars from broken teeth.

I would like to see my home from a remote location without spending a fortune on cameras and peripherals.

There is now a wireless camera system that you can do exactly that. As long as you have internet service to your home or business.

The cameras are completely wireless and are at this time made for indoor only. The basic system will cost you less than $450 which will include 2 cameras, the gateway and the first year of cloud storage of up to 250MB. The cameras are motion activated so you don't have to watch through hours of recordings to find what you are looking for. You can set email alerts that tell you when there is motion detected and you can also download the free app to view cameras from your phone or mobile device. The system is easy to set up and is expandable with additional cameras and gateways.

EYE CARE

Why do my eyes constantly

A: You may not believe it, but one of the main causes of watery eyes is DRY EYE. You still ask, "Dr. Sarah, How can my eyes be dry if they're constantly tearing?". The tear film is a natural lubricant which keeps our eyes moist and our vision clear. One of the most important layers of the tear film is produced within glands in our eyelids. This layer prevents tears from evaporating off the eye. When your glands in your eyelids become clogged then your tears will evaporate quickly. This causes a chain reaction where a message is sent to the brain to make more tears; a large amount of tears are produced; tears roll onto your cheek instead of stay within your eye. Stay tuned for next month's ASK THE EXPERT to find out what to do about watery eyes OR visit Dr. Sarah at Ennis Eye Clinic to have your eyelid glands evaluated.

We are in need of a new roof now but isn't it better to wait until spring?

A: You could definitely wait until spring, but if you are in need of a new roof now, it's as good a time as any. Spring does bring warmer temperatures but it also brings wet weather. While it may be cold in the winter months sometimes it can be drier. There are plenty of contractors that work through winter so the main obstacle really is committing to do it. So come on by or check us out on the web and get some great ideas for roofing/siding or the interior of your home. Have a great 2013, we look forward to seeing you soon.

GENERAL HEALTH

Why doesn't my medical provider prescribe antibiotics to treat my bronchitis?

A: It is important to know that there are two main types of infections that medical providers treat: viral and bacterial. Some bacterial infections, such as "strep throat" are treated appropriately with antibiotics. But viruses are not sensitive to antibiotics. There are antiviral medications that are helpful only in very specific circumstances, such as herpes.

The great majority of bronchitis infections are caused by viruses, and except in certain circumstances, such as chronic emphysema, antibiotics do not make the infection improve any faster.

Supporting your body as it fights the viral bronchitis is important and treating the symptoms can help you feel better. Fluids, rest, humidity, and cough medications can help you improve. Often the infection will last four to seven days, with the cough sometimes lasting several weeks. Despite the popular opinion, yellow or green phlegm does not ssarily mean bacterial infection.

Avoiding antibiotics, unless definitely indicated, prevents antibiotic reactions and decreases the likelihood of resistant germs.

It's another new year, and you know what that means...New Year's Resolution. But this year try rethinking your approach. Start with one goal at a time, and make a solid plan. One way to be more effective is to create SMART goals.

Specific. Write down exactly what you plan to do as well as when and how often. Measurable. If a goal is measurable, you can know when you've succeeded. Attainable. Set yourself up for success by setting goals that are truly

Relevant. Is this really a goal you are interested in, not someone else. Time-bound. It's human nature to put things off so remember to set specific deadlines.

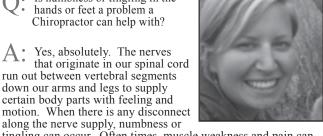

You are also more likely to succeed if you are clear about why you want to make a particular change and know how it will benefit you. Identify your support system and ask for help when you need it. CHIROPRACTIC

Is numbness or tingling in the hands or feet a problem a Chiropractor can help with?

Yes, absolutely. The nerves that originate in our spinal cord run out between vertebral segments down our arms and legs to supply certain body parts with feeling and motion. When there is any disconnect tingling can occur. Often times, muscle weakness and pain can accompany the tingling. When a specific vertebral segment is not moving properly, this disconnect is seen. A chiropractor is trained to find these areas of immobility and assess to determine if that is the cause of your nerve discomfort. By putting motion back into the specific areas, the nerve is able to function more optimally and supply the area being affected. If you are having trouble with any numbness or tingling, please call Dr. Kate at 682-5634 to see if she can help.

I have been a Licensed Esthetician for 10 years and get lots of questions about bikini waxing. Here are the answers to a few.

SKIN CARE

Does it hurt? It can be uncomfortable, but as I tell all my new clients, "I have repeat clients, lots and lots of them". Still nervous, take 2 ibuprofen 30 minutes before appointment. How long does it last? 4-6 weeks is the general time between appointments. Hair needs to be 1/4" long for it to be waxed. This includes grow-out time.

Are there different types? Yes, A traditional bikini wax is any hair that would hang out of a bikini. A Brazilian bikini wax removes all hair from the front and underneath of the pubic area and back-side (yes, butt). There are several names for waxes in between, but those are not important. Discuss with the Esthetician what you want.

Wonderful surprise this week in the mail for me - a letter and book from a new friend in Florida.

Bill and Belinda Jean Maxwell wrote me and sent a book that Bill had written, "Finding Yourself." Maxwell's starting reading The Madisonian while spending their summers in Sheridan three years ago. Bill is a columnist for the Tampa Bay Times.

I sat down to read his book, Finding Yourself, and open it up to the words written by John Burroughs, "I come here to find myself. It is so easy to get lost in the world." I think we all have that special place, and if we don't, we should. For the author, he writes about the book, Tower Gardens. So, I thought to myself where is my place to find myself?

I think it is the drive to work and back. My 24 miles each way, to work in Twin Bridges, hosts everything I hold dear. Growing up memories, the Tobacco Root Mountain range on one side and the Highlands, Table Top Mountain, and Hells Canyon area on the other side. The Bull Mountain range behind me, and the Ruby Mountains ahead of me. It doesn't matter if it is daylight, or dark, the mountains have a different scenic picture each and every day. I could take a different picture every singe day and they would be the same difference. It sends me to work and it takes me home. The drive is a mind-set; no matter what happens that day, this drive will still be there. My drive has scenic photos of all states of the Jefferson River: flowing fast, too low, frozen over, and ice jams; the mountains in sunset, dusk, sunrise, silhouetted, green, dry, snowy, and on fire. The cattle fields along the drive always have some kind of action; cows coming home or leaving for summer pastures, cows being fed hay in winter, and of coarse the baby calves, having and the little rainbows above each risers on the irrigations systems. Every time I drive it there is something different.

I remember coming home from school on the day my dad told us our mom had died. It was the same drive the bus was on, I saw Dad waiting for us at the bus stop and I knew my life was changing. But still I can remember looking out of the bus window to see an old horse I knew, ol' Sally, with Gold Hill, a part of the Tobacco Root range in the back drop. It was saying back to me, "Gail, you can do this." Same with the day they called me at work at school in Twin Bridges and said my brother's condition had changed within hours - telling me to get home. The same route home; to get to him before he passed. I don't remember the drive but I remember the mountains, the Fish Creek gravevard near Waterloo, and Perry Canyon that lead to some of Tim's favorite places to be, like the Bone Basin area. They were all waiting for him and in that I could try to gain some comfort. On that scenic drive between Parrot Castle and Twin Bridges, I have cried, laughed, prayed, resolved problems, and found myself. (Although some may think I am still lost.) Where is your spot in life?

The United Veterans in Twin Bridges are regrouping into their new group, having a meeting this week on Jan. 10 at 7:30 p.m. at the Montana Room at the school. All veterans are welcome to attend and join. They really need more members and help, so please if you are a veteran, think about attending the meeting and joining.

Bill Hanley is still in the Sheridan hospital, going to Butte every other day for treatment, and soon going to the Missoula hospital to have surgery. God bless Jim Paull and his wife, they have been driving Bill to the Butte hospital for treatment every other day since he got out of the Bozeman hospital. Jim said he was retired now, and had the time to help Bill. That just renews your faith in people, when you meet people like the Paulls!

So, what have we learned this week? Every heartache is gonna change you, but it is up to you if it leaves you better or bitter...weaker or stronger. Ever notice most of the things we spend our day worrying about never happen. Set yourself free let it go. Do not let yourself miss the moment worrying about what might not happen. It's funny how after an argument is over, you start to think about more clever stuff you could have said, dang it! If people take you for granted and think that you are vulnerable, show them the way out of your life. To love the way little kids enjoy all the little things in the world, like everything is amazing - wish we all could view life that way, because life is truly amazing!

Making a Kinder World

Life is NOT about getting what you want ... Life IS about sharing more of what you already have. - Steve Dropkin

There is a prayer where we confess we have done things we ought NOT to have done, and where we have failed to do things we ought TO have done.

Isn't that the human condition? We know for the most part what we ought to be doing (loving God and neighbor, taking care of business, being honest, kind, and gentle, and so on), and we mostly do those things, for being good really is a big part of our character (if we have any character), and being good really doesn't take much effort.

It doesn't take a lot of thought to tell the truth. In fact, when we tell the truth we don't have to devote much memory space to remembering our lies and to whom we told them. So, even if telling the truth might be a bit awkward ("Yes, I forgot to pick up that birthday card while I was at the store"), it beats trying to remember any lie you would tell to explain away your omission.

It doesn't take much energy to be kind, either. When driving down Main Street, it doesn't slow the rotation of the earth to stop and let someone back out of their parking space. Providing a safe cushion in which others may back out "blind" potentially saves money, time, and trouble in the long run. That makes it worth the effort in my book.

When I am driving down Main Street, I'm not looking to be kind; I am thinking about what I need to get at the store, or what I need to do when I get to the church. My mind is everywhere but on the road, and so I miss opportunities to "make a difference" and I run the very real risk of having a mishap instead!

Another issue that keeps us from living up to our kind and gentle potential is a matter of ego. We tend to want what we want when we want it, and we often filter out the needs, desires, and perspectives of those whose goals and plans may thwart our own. Consequently, sometimes we trample on others, not out of ill-will, but simply because we don't think of ourselves as being part of a community where sharing is an important component. We don't think in terms of "we" but of

Again, it's not our fault we think that way; it is simply part of the fabric of our being human. We cannot deny the ego (or that we have one), but we can make efforts to reign it in and remember that there are others with whom we must learn to get along if we are going to make our world a better place.

To say we have not done so well in being all we can be is the first step to being honest with God and ourselves. It is a step away from ego and toward humility - which simply stated says, "I am not God, so I can't do everything, but I am human, so there are things I can do. I think I will.'

Being thoughtful and humble will likely make this a better world. I think I will see what I can do along those lines in 2013. But if you're backing out on Main Street, I suggest you still do so cautiously, for God ain't done with me yet in this, our valley.

AT TIMES, MARKETS MAKE MISTAKES

There was nothing bullish for several high profile markets in the final six months of 2012. From the very high set in the last half of the year to the December low, gold prices fell $160 an ounce, crude dipped $16 a barrel, corn and wheat prices dropped approximately $1.60 a bushel, soybean prices were down a monstrous $4.22 a bushel and the Dow fell 1165 points.

Though markets most recovered off the lows, grain prices remain inexplicably weak into the opening days of January. The bears claim the weakness in last half of 2012, was a sneak preview for the year ahead. The bulls argue the markets' made a mistake. No doubt, one of the two viewpoints is going to be wrong. It was the grain complex, however, that left most bewildered because the USDA estimated ending stocks of corn to be below pipeline requirements while soybean supplies were pegged to be the smallest in history by March 1, of the new year. The U.S. wheat crop was forecast to be the worst rated in history due to a lack of moisture. The inability of grain prices to rally in face of such positive news suggests even lower values moving forward because markets anticipatory, accurately forecasting what lies ahead. But I believe at times, markets make mistakes. I believe as Richard Thaler wrote in the Financial Times in the summer of 2009, that, "The price is not always right and markets can be wrong." I also subscribe to the market theories put forward by Andrew W. Lo, a month earlier also in the F.T. in a piece entitled, "Why animal spirits can cause markets to break down."

I believe grain prices weakened significantly in the final months of 2012, because, "animal spirits" generated the break pressing their worth below true economic value. The grain complex, in other words, made a serious mistake moving lower in face of supplydemand fundamentals that were statistically speaking, about as bullish as any I can recall.

Nevertheless, on January 11, the USDA will release the December 1, grain inventory report that will decide if the recent break with grain prices was a mistake, generated by nothing more than animal instincts. Or, the report may show that falling prices correctly anticipated a substantial rise ending supplies and ultimately, even lower grain values for 2013.

According to Darrel Good of the University of Illinois, "The USDA's estimate of Dec. 1, 2012 inventories of corn, to be released on Jan. 11, 2013, will be one of the more important factors influencing the price of old crop corn in the first quarter of the new year. The estimate of soybean stocks may be somewhat less important because more is known about the level of consumption during the first quarter of the 2012-13 marketing year." But in my view, the long awaited report will be the single most important factor influencing grain prices in the first half of the new year. Not simply, the first quarter. Essentially, the estimate the USDA releases on January 11, will reveal whether or not the 2012 corn and soybean crop are being sufficiently rationed. If the report shows larger ending stocks than expected and the summer growing season is trouble free, grain prices will grind lower yet. On the other hand, if the report shows smaller than expected supplies, prices will rally with a fury into the July to August period, building a weather premium out of fears the growing season will be less than perfect.

A wild card in the January 11, inventory report will be the final estimate of the actual size of the 2012 crop. The severity of last summer's drought may force the USDA to show less acres harvested for all grains and in particular corn from what was forecast in November. Fewer harvested acres will likely mean smaller ending supplies. And with corn stocks already pegged below pipeline while soybean stocks will be the smallest in history by early spring, prices have the potential to rise to new, all time highs by mid-year.

I cannot conjure up a more positive scenario for the grain complex than to have the USDA unveil a bullish surprise on January 11, followed by inclement growing conditions in the months of July and August, when crops are made or broken. Razor thin supplies coupled with even a modest reduction in crop production may leave agricultural producers, end users and traders staring at $9 to $10 corn, $12 to $14 wheat and $18 to $20 soybeans by the fall harvest.

It will interesting to hear what the USDA has to say regarding grain stocks because those comments will set the tone for trading in the months to come. It will be equally interesting to discover if the decline in grain prices in late 2012, was due to, "animal spirits" causing the markets to make a serious mistake. Or, the sell-off may have been a classic example of how markets excel at predicting the future. Which of course, is why it is called, the futures market.

MADISON VALLEY RURAL FIRE DEPARTMENT

A new year is just beginning. May this New Year bring peace and joy in your life and take you towards excellence.

This year started off with a flurry of activity for the Madison Valley Rural Fire Department as we received three calls for service in the first five days.

On New Years Day at 7:41 a.m. the MVRFD was dispatched to a commercial fire alarm on Sun Ranch Road. The MVRFD responded a Command, an Engine, and a Tender with six firefighters from Station 1 and a Rescue with two firefighters from Station 2. The Engine and Tender where canceled en route, when the Command and Rescue arrived on scene and determined that the alarm was false. It was determined that the alarm was caused by broken water pipes.

On Jan. 3 at 11:13 a.m.

the MVRFD was dispatched to a carbon monoxide detector activation on Varney Road. The MVRFD responded a Command with four firefighters while three additional firefighters stood-by at Station 1 with further resources should they become necessary. Firefighters checked the residence with a four gas monitor and found no dangerous levels of carbon monoxide. The resident was advised to have the carbon monoxide detector serviced.

The MVRFD was dispatched to the Madison Valley Medical Center to establish a landing zone for the Summit Air Ambulance helicopter at 9:10 p.m. on Jan. 5. The MVRFD responded a Rescue and a Command with six firefighters. MVRFD firefighters conducted traffic control operations and shut down traffic on U.S. Hwy 287 while firefighters set up a landing zone on the highway. Traffic was shut down for a little over 40 minutes while the patient was packaged and transferred to the awaiting helicopter.

If you have any questions or concerns, Madison Valley Rural Fire Chief Shawn Christensen invites you to contact us at 682-3311. We look forward to hearing from you. Down Payment Tips

Many people dream of owning a home but don't think it is possible because they lack the resources for a down payment. Here are a few ideas for securing that down payment:

Borrow from your retirement account: Many people have been investing in a 401(k) plan or traditional IRA for years. First-time homebuyers may borrow up to a certain amount for a down payment often without a penalty. If you are self-employed or if your employer allows it, you can borrow up to a certain amount from your current 401(k) and pay yourself back over a short period of time at a low interest

Look for down payment assistance grants: Down payment assistance and redevelopment community offer affordable programs opportunities housing first-time homebuyers, lowincome and moderate-income individuals and families who wish to own a home.

The Story of Stuff

good friend recommended that I check out the "Story of Stuff" you tube video. A 21-minute low-budget (part of the sustainability endeavor) documentary-style film discusses how since the 1950s governments and, to a larger extent, corporations have forced stuff onto us through planned obsolescence and perceived obsolescence. The film goes on to explain that having to replace items every six months, and that fashion trends change in order to label those who are behind the times and those who are "with it" are causing irreparable harm to our planet.

If you have twenty minutes to spare, check out "Story of Stuff" and if it inspires you...go on to cruise the website, storyofstuff.com. My searching of the website led me to a clip of Annie Leonard (author of Story of Stuff) being interviewed by Stephen Colbert on the Colbert Report. Leonard says in the interview that we don't have to give up our "stuff" but that we should have greater reverence for our stuff and how it affects the environmental health of our planet.

"Can shopping

save the world? The storyofstuff. com website offers the project's newest movie and a short synopsis, "The Story of Change." The Story of Change urges viewers to put down their credit cards and to start exercising their citizen

muscles to build a more sustainable, just and fulfilling world. A shorter film referred to as Episode 1 of Season 2, it offers that to make real change we shouldn't feel guilty about not always being able to afford the greenest products but that we should become part of the larger movement that demands change from the governing bodies. The larger movement is made up of different types of "Changemaker Personalities:" Communicators, Builders, Investigators, Nurturers, Networkers, and Resisters. The website offers a quiz that helps you to identify which type of Changemaker you are.

- you're totally surprised. So, if you're interested in this sustainability stuff,

if you want to learn more about positive ways you can make a difference and help to preserve the planet for future generations, check out storyofstuff.com. Watch the videos and become the change you wish to see in the world (thank you Gandhi). And feel free to share your sustainable successes by posting comments at www. sustainablysadie.blogspot.com (I will have time to update the blog soon, I promise) or emailing sustainablysadie@ hotmail.com. I know that in our small community there many people making sustainable choices every day. The values from pre-1950, "stewardship, resourcefulness and thrift" as mentioned in the film, are alive and well here in southwest Montana as well as the focus on Local Living Economies. You have every right to brag about how you are saving the planet by shopping at your local second-hand store, about your amazing recycling endeavors and how vour random acts of kindness are preserving this place we call home.

Generosity of the Ruby

Valley and beyond

From Doris Fischer

Ruby Valley Food Pantry

The Ruby Valley Food Pantry directors extend a heartfelt thank you to folks in the Ruby Valley and beyond, for their generosity throughout 2012 and especially during the recent holiday season.

Here's a sampling of the many ways in which local residents, businesses, and organizations made it possible this year for the Food Pantry to serve an increasing number of individuals and families in need:

Pantry space furnished by the New Beginnings Christian Fellowship in Sheridan, since the program's inception in 2000.

Cash donations, from $1 on up. Notable this year was the holiday time generosity of area businesses, particularly the Town Pump Charitable Foundation, through its "Be a Friend in Deed, Helping Those in Need" annual matching funds program; the Northwestern charitable Energy giving program; and the Prudential Montana Real Estate agents of Twin Bridges, Sheridan, and Virginia City.

Donations of beef, pork, and turkeys; holiday rolls and breads; canned goods and dried foodstuffs; fresh produce from Jackson's Garden; potatoes from local farms; personal hygiene items like toilet paper and toothbrushes; outdoor sign design services; freezers and freezer space.

drives Food/cash sponsored by USDA-NRCS,

Madison County employees, Bridges Twin FCCLA, Sheridan High School carolers, and Sheridan Stroll crafters.

The cash offerings, food drop locations, and volunteers provided by several area churches. Other food drop locations, including Walter's IGA in Sheridan, Main Street Market in Twin Bridges, and Granny's Country Market in Silver Star.

Important logistical support from Walter's IGA, Jensen's Market in Sheridan, and McLeod's Mercantile in Sheridan.

Referrals of people in need to the Food Pantry.

Unfortunately, some of our local residents live in poverty and face hunger on a routine basis. Others experience a job loss or other financial blow that makes putting food on the table an unexpected challenge for an undetermined length of time. Whatever the situation, the Ruby Valley Food Pantry exists to serve those in need in the greater Ruby Valley. Everyone is welcome.

The Ruby Valley Food Pantry is located at the New Beginnings Church, 114 N. Main Street in Sheridan. Hours of operation are Saturdays from 10 a.m. to noon. Pantry board members are: Wannetta Birdsill, Kerstin Clark, Becky DiGiovanna, Doris Fischer, Susan Hansen, Tanya Kozimer, Nannette Logie, Sandy Taylor, and Jim Wallace. The Pantry's mailing address is P.O. Box 637, Sheridan, MT 59749. For more information, contact 842-7161 or 842-5783.

Small changes can lead to healthier habits

By Debra McNeill Ruby Valley Hospital

Aunt Cora's fudge! Cousin Joy's peanut brittle! Grandpa Harry's hyper-jalapeno nachos! Food is a big part of our holiday celebrations and we may be wearing it well into the New Year. Even if your New Year's resolutions don't include losing a few pounds, you might want to consider some simple modifications to your eating and lifestyle habits.

The health care providers at the Ruby Valley and Twin Bridges Medical Clinics recommend that their patients shift their eating habits toward a Mediterranean style diet. Kathy Tetrault, physician "When assistant, compared with a low fat or low than spreading butter on your diet has been shown in studies to result in more weight loss and better long-term weight maintenance." In addition to weight loss benefits, research has associated the Mediterranean diet with reduced incidents of cancer and Alzheimer's, Parkinson's and cardiovascular diseases!

emphasizes eating more fruits, vegetables, whole grain breads and pastas, fish and poultry. Herbs and spices are recommended substitutes for salt. Red meat consumption should be reduced to once a week, or less. Fish should be part of the meal at least twice a week and lake trout is a very healthy choice. Rather carb diet, the Mediterranean whole grain bread, try dipping you." it in olive oil flavored with basil, garlic or red chilies. Tahini, which is made from ground sesame seeds, is also a tasty alternative to butter. The bottom line is to switch to healthier fats, carbs and meats while eating more fruits and vegetables.

What about venison The Mediterranean diet and elk? For many Madison County residents, game meat is a major source of protein but you'll be hard-pressed to find a Mediterranean dish that includes elk steaks or venison burger. Chris Hartsfield, FNP-BC says, "Natural meats like elk and deer are much better than beef that has been raised and treated with antibiotics or steroids. Anything natural or grass fed is much better for Natural meats are easily substituted for beef or chicken in many recipes and are very healthy so long as they aren't breaded and fried. It's also important to limit or even omit adding fat when processing your game meat into burger. Tetrault concurs, "Usually when I talk to patients about this diet, I do recommend leaner red meats like venison, elk and grass fed beef. It is a healthier alternative that is absolutely appropriate for this

She also recommends that her patients focus their grocery shopping on the perimeter of the store. "The outer circle of a grocery store is typically where all of the fresher foods are located." Staying on the perimeter of the store makes it easier to avoid the boxed, prepared and junk food located in the center aisles!

does not require a gym membership or a big lifestyle change. A reasonable plan consists of 40 minutes of exercise most days of the week. In fact, you don't have to work out for a solid 40 minute set. Tetrault advises that you can obtain the "same benefit from 10 minutes of exercise, four times throughout the day. High intensity exercise isn't necessary. Walking is appropriate."

Another healthy habit to cultivate is limiting TV time to less than ten hours per week. This is one of the biggest contributors to inactivity.

Recreational computer use also falls into the "TV time" allocation.

To sum up: More fruits and Getting enough exercise vegetables; switch to whole grains from processed wheat; switch to poultry and fish from red meat; elk, venison and grass fed meats are a good substitute for beef: switch to olive oil and tahini from butter; switch to herbs and spices from salt; exercise a total of 40 minutes per day, most days of the week and limit recreational screen time (TV and computer) to 10 hours per week.

Madison Valley History Association Christmas celebration

By Don Black M.V. History Assoc.

The Madison History Association hosted its annual Christmas program and dinner on Dec. 20 at the Trinity Episcopal Church in Jeffers.

In its historic 110th Christmas season of the church site, Father Keith Axberg presented a spirited narrative of the celebration of nativity, traditions, facts versus myths and its relevance to today's society. We appreciate such a talented man in our community.

David Hoag was the host of the event and gave a special introduction of Rev. Axberg plus a lively and humorous description of the MVHA board member's duties. The board members and spouses served a traditional Christmas dinner of baked ham, roast turkey, stuffing, mashed potatoes, gravy and beverages.

A poignant moment was felt by all when Larry Love sang an acapella solo of Chestnuts Roasting On An Open Fire. Festivities concluded with gift wrapped presents and the singing of carols. Pamela Kimmey of the Ennis Chamber of Commerce was our special guest and the MVHA thanks Judy Herrick for making the Trinity Church Hall open to us. The Jan. 17 program will feature the Bear Creek School, with Mona Durham sharing the historical events of the school and Karen Shores relating her own family memoires and events.

We thank The Madisonian and First Madison Valley Bank for making all this possible. Happy New Year to the Madison Valley!
